

JP's Design Document

Mission- The mission of the emotion app is to provide biblical verses that relate to your emotions. We made this app for anyone to use who wants feedback from the bible. Our goal is to help you understand that you haven't been the only one going through this.

- Goals:
  - Give people a place they can relate to
  - Easy way to search how you feel and get an answer

User Experience:

Audience Definition- The people I want to reach are those who feel some way and need an answer.

Scenarios:

Dan Cody is a high school boy who lives in New York. He grew up in the projects with his mom. The dad left when Dan was young. One day after school when he was walking home his neighbor told Dan his mom is in the hospital. As he got to the hospital they told him she was gone. Dan was so confused and wondering why this is happening to him. He started getting into drugs and other addictions. When the Dan's family found out about this his uncle took him in to live with him. His uncle was a pastor in New Jersey. He started making Dan go to bible study. It wasn't working for Dan. I think he needed something that closely related to Dan. So he searches "How to deal with depression". He looks and looks and finds something that says "The Emotion App". So he clicks on it and sees the search box where you type in how you feel. He finds all these verses that relate to him. The first time he feels like someone understands him.

A married couple that live in Orlando been married for 10 years. They don't have kids and live by themselves. Their struggling with being happy with each other and having fun again. They happen to see an ad on Facebook that says "The Emotion App" a way you can search a verse that fits you. So they look it up together. They typed the emotion in the search together and found stories on having a healthy marriage again.

A high school basketball player named Jerry Smuckers really wanted motivation to keep playing basketball. He really wanted to play for Maryland. His coach happens to read a verse after practice Phil. 4:13. He really liked that verse so he searched it and saw the verse on an emotion app. So he clicked it and found a whole lot of another motivated verses he liked. This app keep him inspired to do what he loved.

Favor's: My son is 4 years old now and being able to talk well. I think it's time for him to understand the bible more; but I want to make it fun for him. I try to research some ways to make it enjoyable for him. I find "Bible fun for youth". So I looked at it and found games and cool stories that I would think my son would be interested in. When I presented this to my son, it was like any other game he played. He probably didn't understand he was learning the Bible because it was so fun. I suggest all kids start off with this for learning the Bible.

Competitive Analysis: What I've found so far is websites answering people's questions about emotions in the Bible. I haven't seen anybody yet make an app where you can just go and search it yourself. It surprises me because their already telling the people where to look in the Bible but never made it easier for them on their site. I think if I imagined my site it would be something like this. A search engine to type in your feelings, also an easy way to type in a bible verse. It's very user friendly not hard to use at all. I don't really have any negatives comments about this at all. This is basically what mine will look like just in a app version.
